

Exercise 3 — Direct Experience Inventory

Moments of knowing directly

Exercise 3 — Direct Experience Inventory

Purpose

This exercise asks you to identify moments when you knew something directly — not through reasoning, not through being told, but through immediate recognition. These moments are signposts.

Investigation 1 — Moments of Knowing

Describe three moments when you knew something directly, without needing proof or explanation.

Investigation 2 — The Quality of Knowing

For each moment above, describe how it felt. What was different about this kind of knowing?

Reflection

- What do these moments have in common?
- Can you cultivate this kind of knowing intentionally, or does it arrive on its own?

Recognition

"Direct knowing does not require belief. It requires presence."

Practice

Notice the difference between thinking about something and knowing it directly. When you experience a moment of direct knowing this week, write it down immediately. Do not analyse it — simply record it.
